Vincent Van Gogh, the originals of which are in the museum of Dordrecht. As we turn the pages, we are many times reminded of Millet's immortal peasants.

In the Photograph and Lantern Slide Department a gratifying development is the cordial response to press notices on the part of two great institutions—the Business World and the Church—which are just beginning to awaken to the opportunity that lies at their disposal. The publishing firm in particular finds in the large collection of photographs a liberal supply of excellent illustrative material, the need for which is not easy to fill in war times; while the Church in its ever widening activity sees the opportunity of using the lantern slides, photographs, and postcards in lectures for its boys' clubs and social gatherings and as illustrations for its Sunday School classes.
